

Hands up

if you're sick of seeing kids abused and killed in New Zealand

Every single day, another child's precious life is extinguished or damaged because of violent parents or caregivers. This has got to stop.

But who's going to stop it? The politicians? There's only so much they can do. And despite all the Government groups appointed to oversee and intervene, New Zealand still has one of the worst rates of child abuse in the world.

What's the problem? To be honest, we are – the New Zealand public.

- Over the last 30 years we have allowed a succession of policies to diminish the significance of family structure and marriage.
- We have watched politicians give violent adults the right to silence, bail and parole
- We have allowed political correctness to get in the way of speaking the truth about the real causes of child abuse.
- We have allowed children to be raised in homes with an unacceptable level of violence, drug abuse, family dysfunction, and emotional harm.
- We have allowed the media to fill our minds with increasing levels of sexual and violent content in the name of entertainment and freedom of speech.

Let's put our hands up. Let's stop the abuse!

Family First NZ and For the Sake of Our Children Trust are calling for the implementation of a 5pt Action Plan:

- 1. Establishing a non-political Commission of Inquiry comprising community leaders who are already working with at-risk families. This Inquiry will identify effective and achievable solutions to child abuse after examining the role of drug and alcohol abuse, family structure and breakdown, race-based issues, poverty and stress, and other factors.
- 2. Immediate increase of support and resourcing of grass-root community organisations who are educating and working with at-risk families – Barnados, Salvation Army, Crosspower Ministries in Otago, Homes of Hope in Tauranga, Te Whare Ruruahu O Meri in South Auckland, Amokura in Northland, Family Help Trust in Christchurch, and many other charitable groups around the country working within their communities.
- 3. Increased availability of parenting and marriage programmes such as Parents Inc, Triple P and other early childhood home-based programmes - for example HIPPY run by Great Potentials, Early Start, Parents as First Teachers, Plunket Helpline, etc.
- 4. Media-based anti-'child abuse' and positive parenting campaign. This would follow the model of the road safety 'shock' campaigns and would encourage positive parenting and the identifying of abuse.
- 5. Sentencing for those who abuse and kill our children to be substantially toughened to provide both a deterrent and a clear message of our community's disgust with the actions of people who abuse children.
